Robert Asaadi is an Adjunct Professor in the Departments of Political Science and International Studies. He received his Ph.D. in Political Science from the University of Minnesota in 2016, and works in the subfields of International Relations and Comparative Politics. Professor Asaadi’s research and teaching interests include: international relations theory; international security; Middle East and Iranian politics; and U.S. Foreign Policy.

Professor Asaadi fosters a classroom environment that prioritizes active learning, inclusion, and a critical attitude toward the study of politics. His commitment to meeting the needs of diverse audiences is exemplified at both the University of Minnesota and Portland State University, where he has worked with students with wide-ranging learning styles and levels of familiarity with course subject matter to build comprehension and cultivate critical thinking. Moreover, at Portland State University, he has worked closely with the Center for Student Health and Counseling to make the necessary accommodations for students. His exceptionally high scores on teaching evaluations further speak to his ability to create opportunities for active learning, inclusion, and critical thinking towards students’ success.

2017 is the inaugural year for the Adjunct Faculty Excellence Award for Teaching, which recognizes and honors the outstanding contributions of adjunct faculty.
