

Portland State University
Department of Anthropology
Thomas M. Newman Award Application

About

The Thomas M. Newman Fund was established in 1985 as a scholarship. Professor Newman was a founding faculty member of the Portland State University Anthropology Department from 1959 to 1982. An archaeologist, Professor Newman was a dedicated scholar and teacher who believed strongly in his students and in the value of Anthropology. The award was established in his memory. It is open to any Anthropology Graduate Student in good standing.

Awards will be made to assist students with funds for tuition; or to cover reimbursable expenses associated with thesis or applied projects (e.g. a radiocarbon date, informant's fees, travel to a research locality, specialized equipment), attend a conference to present a paper or poster. Finally the award can be given to the student directly as a check (which is taxable). One award of $1000.00 is anticipated annually.

Funds can be spent upon award and are coordinated through the Anthropology Office. The award is not renewable, but students may apply more than one time.

The award decision is made by the Anthropology Advisory Council, which is composed of graduates of the Anthropology Department at Portland State University. They believe the discipline of Anthropology is a body of knowledge that has made a difference in our personal and professional lives. They view anthropology as an intellectually powerful field of study that can be at once liberating, challenging, and immensely satisfying.
