Improve educational outcomes with a doctorate

The College of Education’s Educational Leadership Doctoral Program (EdD) is designed for those who want to take leadership positions in their communities and make a positive impact to foster change toward a more just society. The focus of the EdD program is to develop leaders who anticipate and respond to the changing concerns and lifelong educational needs of community members, whether in schools, colleges, businesses, government organizations, or social service agencies, by creating and leading inclusive and diverse learning organizations with a focus on social justice.

Select from one of four cohort-based specializations: Curriculum and Instruction, Special Education, K-12 Administration, Postsecondary Education.

The College of Education is a consortium member of the Carnegie Project for the Education Doctorate (CPED).
