Interested in a PhD program in public health?

OUR SCHOOL
By leveraging the unique and shared strengths of Oregon Health & Science University and Portland State University, our School is poised to meet the evolving public health needs of Oregon and beyond.

Our mission is to prepare a public health workforce, create new knowledge, address social determinants, and lead in the implementation of new approaches and policies to improve the health of populations. Our vision is that through education, research, and community engagement, the School of Public Health will be a leader in promoting health and eliminating disparities in Oregon and beyond.

OUR PROGRAMS
Our doctoral program in Community Health is intended for students interested in advanced training in research, intervention design and community-based public health efforts with a focus on the social and behavioral determinants of health.

Our doctoral program in Epidemiology is intended for students who have an interest in applying quantitative population-based health research theory to practice as they prepare for careers as researchers and educators.

Our doctoral program in Health Systems and Policy is an interdisciplinary program designed for students who wish to develop advanced knowledge, analytic skills, and competencies in conducting applied research and developing teaching and learning skills in health systems and policy topical areas.
