This course explores the causes and consequences of economic, social and political inequality in the United States. We begin with an overview of poverty, inequality and the class structure in America. Then we examine the consequences of inequality (i.e., its impact on adults, children and families). In the third portion of the course we turn to the efficacy of social welfare programs that focus on poverty and inequality. Students will develop their own solutions to these issues during the final weeks of the term.