As the number of online courses and programs at PSU expands, so must our attention to giving online students the same vibrant community-based learning (CBL) opportunities as their face-to-face counterparts. This workshop series is designed to support faculty in designing and teaching innovative online CBL courses and to serve as a space to develop a professional community of online CBL instructors who share resources, discuss useful and dynamic technology tools, and track promising practices.

Session #1: Building a Pre-Course or Introductory Toolkit: Strategies for a Running Start
Wednesday, November 6th, 12 noon to 1:15 p.m. in SMSU 209 mezzanine*
Kicking off our workshop series focused on community-based learning in fully online courses, this session will cover topics/techniques that can be used to give our students a running start either before the term begins or in the first week of the term. Topics will include using course descriptions effectively to outline major time and communication expectations to students, designing a technology toolkit for student preview, scheduling technology check points, and developing strong communication plans for supporting students in securing their community partnerships. Facilitated by Zapoura Calvert-Newton

Session #2: (title to be announced)
