II. Compiled Bibliographies and Online Resources

- Campus Compact provides a rich database of service-learning resources, including subcategories that focus on service-learning's impact in rural areas, engineering and science courses, and student retention. Also, Tennessee Campus Compact has culled top service-learning resources from around the nation, and presented them as direct links on their website. National Campus Compact and the Carnegie Foundation are among the most commonly cited sources.

- Teaching and Learning Strategies: Service Learning- This resource was prepared by Kate McPherson, Director of Project Service Leadership, for New Horizons for Learning, an online resource and quarterly journal under Johns Hopkins University's School of Education. McPherson provides a solid introduction to Service-Learning, distinguishing it from community service, and framing it through common applications in the educational setting. Five rich articles are linked, as well as a recommended reading list and suggested websites for further reference.
