Welcome back to Latin. Your Latin muscles have relaxed for a while, but hopefully not atrophied. If so, do not despair, we will begin with a short review.

You will be glad to know that no new purchases will be necessary this term. We will continue to use Wheelock’s Latin and Short Latin Stories, both of which are available in the PSU bookstore. We will finish Wheelock this term and then launch into real Latin literature in the winter term.

In addition to keeping the same texts, the procedure will not change. There will be four quizzes and four exams, at the same interludes as in the first year, in other words, a quiz every two chapters and an exam (opportunity) every three chapters. We will spend the first week in review.

My office hours will be 10:15-11:00 am, Monday through Thursday, and I will be glad to meet at other times by appointment, if necessary. My office is located on the mezzanine of the second floor of Neuberger Hall (NH M227C). I can be reached at 503-725-9776 or at det@pdx.edu. Please do not hesitate to come by for help or to discuss anything related to your studies.

In addition to our class activities, there is the Latin club, which plans events and get-togethers which are of interest to anyone attracted to ancient languages and culture. If you are not already on its email list, please let me know, so I can add your name.

[This syllabus is representative of the course content and is subject to change.]
Please also be aware that there is a Classical Studies minor and that many students throughout the university are enrolled in it. If you are interested, please let me know.

Best wishes for a good year and many pleasant Latin moments. After completing the chapters in Wheelock, we will launch into an anthology of Latin literature, including Virgil, Ovid, Caesar, Cicero, Catullus, and others. For the present, however, we will spend a little more time with bonus Wheelockus magister.

Ualete et fortuna uobis sit bona!
